Oklahoma State University helps shape next generation of Russian entrepreneurs

Posted: 05 Oct 2011 12:54 PM PDT

There is a global entrepreneurial revolution afoot, and Russia is in its midst. Free markets represent a highly effective economic structure or system, but they do not work without someone to drive them. The driver is the entrepreneur. There is a need for a society filled with individuals with dreams, who will take calculated risks, demonstrate tenacity and perseverance, and creatively overcome the challenges and obstacles that are inherent in creating something new.

UK's Kingfisher to invest $180 million in Russia

Posted: 04 Oct 2011 03:36 PM PDT

When I was in Moscow recently, as part of the visit by U.K. Prime Minister David Cameron, I was struck once more by the scale of the retail opportunity in Russia. Russia has a growing economy, a willingness to modernize its economic structures and a population eager to enjoy the benefits of a more consumer-oriented society.

CSR can unlock Russia's economic potential

Posted: 06 Oct 2011 04:06 PM PDT

In recent years, Russia has made a significant commitment to modernization. What this means for business in Russia, and how best to implement such a lofty goal, however, is up for debate. What is certain is that for Russia to continue to develop as an appealing market for significant foreign and domestic investment, fundamental changes to its business culture must take place.

UK-Russia sign MOU ahead of upcoming Olympic Games

Posted: 06 Oct 2011 10:01 AM PDT

British and Russian Olympic organizations have pledged to step up cooperation ahead of the forthcoming summer and winter Olympic games, just weeks after U.K. Prime Minister David Cameron said that such a move would boost mutual prosperity during a trip to Moscow.

On September 28, Colin Moynihan, chairman of the British Olympic Association (BOA), signed a memorandum of understanding with his counterpart Alexander Zhukov, president of the Russian Olympic Committee (ROC), remarking that it showed a commitment to sharing best practices and improving relations.
